Ashbury Confectionery
Making an investment sweeter

Alchemy Partners, one of Britain’s foremost venture capital companies, found itself in a heated battle with three other potential venture capital investors over Ashbury Confectionery a small niche manufacturer with blue chip clients. Gaining a one week “exclusive”, it called in Renoir Consulting to carry out an operational due diligence assessment. As a result, Alchemy was able to structure a deal favoured by the MBO team and succeeded in the investment. Key to the deal was an agreed involvement by Renoir to look at the business with a view to quickly ramp up its potential. Renoir’s involvement at this stage not only helped Alchemy win the deal, but through an implemented change programme following the investment, the Ashbury Renoir team delivered an immediate annualised savings of £600,000, rising to £900,000 and an increase in throughput of up to 25%. Ashbury Confectionery is a manufacturer of own label and branded chocolates, producing chocolates for Woolworth’s, Marks and Spencer, Tesco and Sainsbury’s.

ANALYSIS
An initial assessment looked at the overall business. The study that the process of producing chocolate was fairly simple, but there were many complexities resulting from up to 15 different varieties in each pack and double handling of the unwrapped product for multiple customers. Equally, the changeover process was fairly simple, but time consuming. There were also issues around product run length versus stock holding and shelf life.

Finally, there were questions about the forecasting and production planning process.

PROJECT
There are two critical aspects to the success of any change initiative: getting the technical aspects right and the complete involvement of all the main players. The most effective balance is achieved through our Focus Process™ and our clients tell us that it is this approach that sets us apart.

It was agreed that the main focus was to improve operational performance, reduce indirect costs and to introduce a branded candy bar line, with associated higher margins, to supplement the existing product range.

“As providers of venture capital, our investments have a degree of risk. The Renoir Group’s involvement in an investment made by us has helped reduce its risk profile.”
